Part B: Short Answer Questions.(Answer any 10 questions. Each question carries 3 marks)

21. Explain how advertising warns against imitation. [U]/ [CO1]

Advertising uses "Brand Protection" strategies. By highlighting distinct brand assets (logos, unique packaging) and emphasizing "The Original," ads train consumers to use visual heuristics to avoid cheaper, low-quality substitutes.Advertising emphasizes unique brand markers, trademarks, and "genuine" labels to differentiate from counterfeits. Advertisements include disclaimers (e.g., “Do not try this at home”) to prevent unsafe imitation, especially in risky scenes (stunts, driving, etc.).Also by protecting brand identity (counterfeiting) and preventing behavioral mimicry (safety).

22. Identify the impact of demonstrative advertisements on consumer perception. [U]/ [CO3]

Demonstrations serve as "Informational Social Influence." They provide evidence of a product's utility, moving the consumer from skeptical processing to acceptance by reducing "performance risk." Increases "Perceived Utility" by showing the product in action. Reduces cognitive dissonance and purchase risk. Enhances trust through evidence-based claims.

23. Define priming. [K]/ [CO1]

A psychological phenomenon where exposure to one stimulus influences the response to a subsequent stimulus without conscious awareness.

24. Summarize advantages of product demo or sample products in the store. [U]/ [CO1]

Provides immediate sensory experience, builds trust, and triggers the reciprocity principle (desire to buy after receiving a free gift).Reciprocity: Receiving a free sample creates a psychological obligation to "repay" the brand with a purchase. Sensory Branding: Engages touch, smell, or taste, creating a stronger memory trace than visual ads alone.

25. Illustrate the concept of drive theory in consumer motivation with an example.

[U]/ [CO2]

Drive theory suggests that a "need" (state of tension) triggers a "drive" to return to homeostasis.

Example: Hunger (drive) leads to purchasing a snack (tension reduction)(Students can write their own examples)

26. What is the significance of unconditioned and conditioned stimuli in advertising?

[E]/ [CO1]

Advertisers use Classical Conditioning to pair a brand (Conditioned Stimulus) with a positive feeling stimulus (Unconditioned Stimulus, like a popular song).Eventually, the brand alone triggers the positive emotional response.

27. Apply the ease-of-retrieval effect to improve consumer recall of a brand slogan.

[A]/ [CO3]

The "Availability Heuristic" suggests that if something is easy to remember, it must be important. Advertisers use short, rhythmic slogans (e.g., Nike's "Just Do It") because the "ease" with which the slogan comes to mind makes the brand feel more trustworthy. - The easier a slogan is to retrieve, the more a consumer trusts it..Using short, rhythmic, and simple language makes a slogan easier to process and remember, increasing its mental availability.

28. Classify different types of misleading advertising tactics that contribute to miscomprehension. [U]/ [CO3]

Puffery: Subjective, exaggerated claims ("The best coffee in the universe").

Deceptive Visuals: Using non-product items to make the product look better (e.g., using motor oil on pancakes for food photography).

Hedge Words: Using words like "may" or "helps" to avoid making concrete claims.

Omission: Leaving out vital information (e.g., high interest rates) in a promotion.

Using complex technical jargon to confuse.

29. What are the essential elements of print advertising that contribute to building a strong brand identity? [K]/ [CO1]

Consistent use of logos, color schemes, typography (fonts), and a recognizable brand voice/tone in the copy. Visual Metaphor: Using images to represent abstract benefits. Typography & Color: Consistent visual cues that trigger brand recognition (e.g., Coca-Cola red). White Space: Often used in luxury ads to signal "premium" status.

30. Simplify the concept of psychological analysis of an advertisement. [An]/ [CO4]

Evaluating an ad based on how it targets human emotions, subconscious biases, and personality traits to influence behavior

31. Describe advertising, and explain why is it important in business? [U]/ [CO1]

Advertising is a paid, non-personal communication tool. It is vital for creating awareness, differentiating products, and driving sales

32. Describe how self-esteem affects consumer decisions. [U]/ [CO2]

Consumers buy products to enhance their self-image or to align with a "desired self," often seeking products that boost confidence or social status. Consumers use "Self-Signaling." Low self-esteem may lead to "Compensatory Consumption" (buying status symbols to feel better), while high self-esteem leads to "Brand Congruence" (buying products that reflect who they already are). Less influenced by peer pressure.

33. Compare brochure ads and billboard ads. [U]/ [CO1]

- Brochures: Detailed, high information density, long attention span needed, targeted at high-involvement buyers. - Billboards: Low information density (max 7 words), 3-5 second viewing time, targeted at mass brand awareness for mobile audiences/ rapid viewing.
