Part B SHORT ANSWER

Answer any six questions. Each question carries 5 marks.

11. Literature teaches us to think creatively about differences - to think beyond political ideologies to understand the other in all quirks and peculiarities. CO1
12. Chesterton suggests a romantic view of inconveniences - that we should accept and enjoy a flood. He feels that the flood would have doubled the beauty of the place and made it like Venice. CO1
13. Outside Covent Garden Theatre in London in a rainy evening. CO2
14. Farcical elements found in Shakespearean plays - became popular as independent entertainment by late 17th century. Lost prominence during the rise of Sentimental Comedy--Gained popularity again with anti-sentimental comedies--Flourished in Victorian period. CO2
15. Tragedy traditionally features characters of noble birth—whose downfall evokes pity and fear. Their elevated status makes their fall more profound and tragic. In contrast, comedy usually deals with characters from lower or middle classes, focusing on ordinary life and relatable flaws. CO2
16. Hynkel's focus on self-image- his value of his time over one’s life- theatrically exaggerated mode of leadership- the generation of fear by silencing any potential question- the self-emphatic and belittling others- characteristics of a dictator is explicit from his treatment of his subordinates. CO3
17. Adenoid Hynkel and Jewish barber identical in their appearances- the barber escapes from the camp in borrowed dress- taken to military camp- prompted to address the audience thinking that he is Hynkel- followed by the climax speech slaying fascism and dictatorship-breaking the fourth wall. CO3
18. Higgins, holds significant power over Eliza because he has the ability to teach her "proper" speech and sees himself as the "creator" of Eliza. Eliza challenges Higgins' authority and shows that language is a means of personal empowerment. By the end of the film, Eliza's command of language gives her the confidence to stand up for herself, shifting the power dynamics. CO4

19. The ending of My Fair Lady tries to satisfy audience expectations for a romantic conclusion – presents a more idealistic view of relationships - suggests a reunion between Higgins and Eliza - Shaw's Pygmalion ends with a more ambiguous, empowering conclusion that leaves Eliza's future in her own hands, independent of Higgins or Freddy. Part C Essay

Answer any two questions. Each question carries 15 marks.

20. Eliza Doolittle is a young Cockney woman who is selling flowers in Covent Garden on a rainy evening. When Higgins, a phonetics professor overhears Eliza speaking, starts making notes, and in a somewhat condescending manner, he remarks on her rough accent, as though she is a linguistic specimen to be studied. He sees her less as a person and more as an object to be transformed. He brags that Eliza's accent is the only reason she is poor, and he could pass her off as nobility after six months of speech lessons. The opening scene in the film foreshadows the conflict and dynamics that will unfold: Higgins' belief in his superiority and his desire to control the transformation, contrasted with Eliza's growing sense of independence and self-worth. CO4
21. Formal Essays- an impersonal and objective composition, usually used for the discussion of ideas or knowledge - introduced to England by Francis Bacon - who wrote in short, crisp sentences that read like aphorisms about "counsels, civil and moral". Informal Essays – introduced by Montaigne in French- reveal writer's own personality - written in a subjective tone. Charles Lamb's Essays of Elia- a delightful blend of autobiography, erudition, fancy, humour and sentiment. CO1
22. Classical Theatre: Greek theatre was performed in large open-air amphitheatres with tiered seating and a circular orchestra. Space was symbolic and ritualistic, used for processions and choral movements. The structure ensured visibility, audibility, and communal viewing. Elizabethan Theatre: Theatres like The Globe had thrust stages projecting into the audience, creating intimacy. They were open-roofed, with galleries and the pit reflecting social divisions. There were no elaborate sets—space was used suggestively, relying on language and actor movement. Modern Theatre: It uses diverse spaces: proscenium, thrust, black box, and theatre-in-the-round. Realism demands detailed sets; symbolic and abstract staging is also common. Technology allows flexible lighting, projections, and sound to redefine spatial experience. CO2
23. French term- mise en scene-"to place on stage"- related to the composition or framing of the scene- in theatre, visual elements in film - camera angle, camera distance, lenses, lighting, positioning of people and object in relation to each other- Close up, medium and long shot and its effective uses; Eg. Spikelee's Crooklyn_-- Camera angle - high, straight and low angle shots and its objectives, special effects like "forced perspective"- Camera movement, used to change perspective Eg. Camera following a feather in the movie Forest Gump. CO3
