PART B

11.The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) is a foundational document adopted by the UN in 1948, establishing universal human rights standards, thus promoting global human security and dignity.

12.International trade policies can either promote economic stability or exacerbate inequalities, affecting job security, access to essential goods, and overall economic resilience in developing nations.

13.Political participation empowers citizens, promotes accountability, and ensures inclusive governance, reducing the risk of conflict and enhancing community security and social cohesion.

14.An ethical framework for humanitarian interventions prioritizes impartiality, non-discrimination, and the protection of vulnerable populations while respecting sovereignty and minimizing unintended harm.

15.Inadequate access to nutritious food impairs physical and cognitive development, increases susceptibility to diseases, and perpetuates poverty, undermining overall health and societal well-being.

16.Pandemics strain healthcare systems, disrupt economies, and expose inequities in access to essential services, leading to widespread health, social, and economic insecurity.

17.Deforestation accelerates climate change by releasing stored carbon, disrupting ecosystems, and reducing natural carbon sinks, thereby increasing environmental and human vulnerability.

18.Political stability fosters economic development, social cohesion, and law enforcement, while instability breeds conflict, displacement, and insecurity, undermining human rights and basic needs.

PART C

19.Political decisions during natural disasters determine resource allocation, emergency response, and recovery efforts-effective governance can mitigate damage and protect vulnerable populations, while poor planning exacerbates human insecurity through inadequate infrastructure, delayed relief, and unequal access to essential services.

20.World Health Organization (WHO) coordinates global pandemic responses by monitoring disease outbreaks, providing guidelines, supporting national health systems, and facilitating vaccine distribution, thereby reducing health disparities and promoting public health security on a global scale.

21.India’s Human Rights Commission addresses violations, promotes awareness, and recommends policies to protect marginalized communities, ensuring that human rights principles are integrated into national security frameworks and reducing risks of discrimination and abuse.

22.Politics shapes human security policies by influencing budget allocations, enforcement of human rights, and prioritization of security threats-power dynamics, political agendas, and international relations impact the implementation and effectiveness of security measures, affecting vulnerable populations.
